Objection to the plan was seen in the belief that Italians outnumbered the Loyalist aids six to one and equal withdrawal would leave a formidable Italian army in Spain. Sessions of the committee were adjourned until Tuesday to permit efforts to avoid another deadlock. [Page 1.] Italian reactions to the London proceedings were pessimistic, particularly in view of Foreign Secretary Eden's speech, regarded as a threat to reopen the Pyrenees border for supply of arms to the Loyalists. Of the 1,046 issues traded, however, 745 closed lower. Trading was heaviest since 1933. President Roosevelt, in the face of rumors and demands for official action, made no comment on the market decline, but it was indicated in Administration quarters that the government would keep hands off. [Page 1.] The SEC called its New York director to Washington for a report, continuing its inquiry into short selling during the break. [Page 10.] Securities in London were weak following Monday's break, with traders uncertain on the significance of the trend.
